

CONGRESSIONAL CHAT.

President Cleveland Gets Another Raking in the Senate.

CHANDLER, OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,

Claims That He is Exceeding His Powers and Compares Him to Emperor William—The Hawaiian Question—Senator Camden Speaks in Favor of Repeal—A Fiery Southern Speech in the House.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 1.—Saturday in the senate closed the eighth week of the extraordinary session, and the fifth week of debate on the bill to repeal the purchasing clauses of the act of 1890, commonly called the Sherman law. There was yesterday one speech on each side of the pending question, Senator Camden, of West Virginia, in advocacy of repeal, and Senator Peffer, of Kansas, in opposition to repeal and favoring the free coinage of silver.

Senator Chandler, in his criticism on the constitutional grounds of the action of the President in the appointment of Mr. Blount as his personal representative in the Hawaiian matter, was closely followed by Republicans and Democrats alike, and, for the determined effort to press the repeal bill to a vote, the incident would doubtless have led to an interesting debate.

The resolution offered yesterday by Mr. Chandler, calling for information as to the commission now investigating the New York custom house, was laid before the senate, and Mr. Chandler addressed the senate.

APPRAISER COOPER FORCED TO RESIGN.

He said the object of the resolution is to ascertain the facts from the treasury department, and, after ascertaining them, to invoke, if necessary, the action of Congress to prevent the appointment of officers or nominal officers of the United States without warrant of constitution or of law and contrary to the spirit of both. Mr. Chandler sent up to the desk and had read the letter of Appraiser Cooper, tendering his resignation because of the treatment he had received at the hands of the commission.

Mr. Sherman inquired whether there is any authority in law for the appointment of a commission.

Mr. Chandler said there is not. Before going into that question, however, he wanted to show the character of the work the commission had been doing. He then read from the New York papers reports of the proceedings of the commission.

He read a statement that after Grover Cleveland was elected President, one of the first decisions which he and his advisers reached was that places must be found for some of the anti-snapper Democrats in New York state without violating the civil service pretensions.

TRYING TO WORK ON HILL'S FEELINGS.

He called this statement especially to the attention of the senator from New York (Mr. Hill) in order that the senator might tell the senate, if he pleased, whether any of the vacancies that had been made by the commission had been filled by anti-snapper Democrats only, or by Democrats who belonged to that wing of the party to which the senator belonged.

Another article, which he had read, said ex-Secretary Fairchild is on the "fraud roll" along with spies and detectives. Mr. Chandler argued that there is no authority in law for the appointment of commissioners, as a reference to the constitution showed, and that great document could not be resorted to too often when there is a President in the white house who, in the making of appointments, is willing to violate the language of the constitution.

Mr. Chandler said ex-Secretary Fairchild, who had tried to demolish the senior senator from New York (Mr. Hill), was anxious for recognition by the administration, and it was not convenient to give him.

A COMMISSION CREATED FOR THEM.

These gentlemen, however, finally found recognition at the hands of the administration by being appointed an investigation commission, in pursuance of an appropriation in the sundry civil appropriation bill of March, 1889, for the "detection of fraud upon the customs revenue."

"That is all the pretense of authority there is," said Mr. Chandler, "for this attempt to reward these distinguished gentlemen for their political services to the Democratic party, and for their heroic attempts to build up the Anti-Snapper faction in the state of New York in destruction of Senators from that state, whom I am pleased to see upon this floor."

Referring to the repeal bill, Mr. Chandler said he is now supporting the President in his efforts to secure the repeal of the silver law. This would not deter him, however, from criticizing the President, who, he thought, is given too much to disregarding the provisions of expressed law and to make a law unto himself, and in the White House, when he reached a determination, to attempt to carry out that determination, whether he found law for it or not.

THE HAWAIIAN QUESTION DRAGGED IN.

Mr. Chandler referred to "the message to the Senate communicated to Governor Northen, of Georgia," and said he was struck with the justice of a criticism he had seen in a recent London newspaper that there is a singular resemblance between the letters of President Cleveland and those of the Emperor of Germany. Going back to the Hawaiian episode, Mr. Chandler read from the letter of the President to the provisional Government of Hawaii the closing sentence, "May God have your excellency in His wide keeping."

"What a beneficent air of royalty there is about that extension of the good wishes of His Majesty, the President of the United States," said Mr. Chandler, "through his personal commissioner, Mr. Blount, who has paramount authority, to the provisional Government of the Hawaiian Islands?"

Mr. Chandler said the appointment of Mr. Blount was a more gross violation of the constitution than had occurred in 100 years. It is time the President and heads of departments should be brought to a rigid observance of the constitution.

The resolution was then agreed to.

THE PENSION QUESTION BOBS UP.

The resolution heretofore offered by Mr. Dolph (Ore.) calling for information as to the payment of pensions to persons residing abroad was taken up. Mr. Dolph said there is either great ignorance in the action of the pension bureau, or premeditated, deliberate design to thwart the will of Congress, and he cited the case of the widow of Commodore Watson, whose pension, granted by special act of Congress, was suspended six months ago, and she was called upon to prove by living persons an event which occurred 85 years ago. The resolution was placed on the calendar.

The repeal bill was laid before the senate at 1 o'clock as the unfinished business, and Mr. Camden, of West Virginia, addressed the senate in advocacy of the bill. He said the Sherman is an innovation on the recognized principles of finance, and he should vote for its repeal with the clear understanding that it should not produce a contraction in the volume of money, which should be provided against.

Mr. Peffer resumed his argument against the repeal bill begun on Thursday. He concluded his speech at 4:30 p. m., and after a brief executive session the senate adjourned.

A SOUTHERN FIRE EATER.

Representative Patterson, of Tennessee, Does Some Tall Talking.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 1.—The session of the house yesterday lasted only three hours. The feature of the debate was the speech of Representative Patterson, of Tennessee. With a frankness and boldness that attracted the attention of Democrats and Republicans alike, he reviewed the history of the reconstruction period and struggle of the white men in the south to regain control of the states after the war. He admitted that violence and even fraud might have been used, but asserted that the Anglo-Saxon race is, in the nature of things, certain to dominate eventually in a race contest. He proceeded with his fierce denunciation of the Republican party under a hot running fire from all the Republican leaders.

"The greatest calamity," said he, "that ever happened to a free people was the assassination of Lincoln. Had he lived and been permitted to carry out his policy there would have been peace and prosperity in the south twenty-five years ago. The excitement and hate engendered by Lincoln's assassination made it possible for the ambitious Republican leaders to place their heel on the neck of the south. The reconstruction legislation was passed on the theory that the sovereignty of states was gone, that the southern states were conquered territory."

He called attention to the condition of affairs in the south before the war, when the man who would corrupt or spend money in elections was a dishonored man. If it has been otherwise in the south since the war the origin must be looked for in these election measures. The states were Mexicanized, the white people of the South had to submit or resort to fraud to get back control. The alternative forced on those people was the most awful in the history of the Anglo-Saxon race. In the south, by these measures, he said, addressing the Republicans, you draw the color line; you force all white men, protectionists or free traders, into the defense of that other overshadowing doctrine that the white man shall rule.

Mr. Warner, of New York, in sympathy with the measure, said: "John Davenport made thousands of votes for the Democratic party in New York by the disgust he had created in the minds of all good men, Republicans and Democrats alike. He called attention to the testimony of ex-Senator Dorsey to show that a golden streak had flowed into New York in 1884 to debauch the ballot."

THE OBSTRUCTION IN THE SENATE

Against the Repeal of the Sherman Silver Law Somewhat of a Surprise. Two Points of View as to the Ultimate Action of the Senate—Some Hopeful Symptoms—The Wool Market and General Trade Matters.

Special Correspondence of the Intelligence.

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—Wall street shows little change from the reactionary tendency that has held the securities market in check for the past month. Its attitude is simply a waiting one, not by any means one of despondency. The overwhelming vote of the house of representatives for silver repeal produced a large advance in prices, but buyers did not sufficiently take into account the possibilities of obstruction in the senate. That obstruction, however, came with a force and a persistence that has taken the whole country by surprise and put a check upon all the reviving tendencies which the house vote had brought into play. The senate's delay has been like the return of winter in the middle of spring. It has nipped in the bud reviving confidence and put a fresh check upon the industries that were beginning to venture upon a renewal of operations. It has also had the effect of reawakening distrust among our foreign creditors, with the result not only of stopping their buying of our securities, but also of causing some return of them to this country. Such an interruption to an unqualifiedly hopeful drift of affairs could scarcely have a less injurious effect upon the stock market than has actually happened. The wonder is that the relapse has not been much more severe, and the fact that prices now stand comparatively steady is evidence that Wall street at least is far from hopeless as to the senate ultimately adopting the repeal bill.

There are two points of view from which the disappointing attitude of the senate may be considered. There is that of the ordinary observer, who understands little about the methods and tricks of parliamentary warfare, or the complications of party interests and of legislative policies. These people are led by the external appearance of the moment and easily mistake weak parliamentary feints for real strength, and they are consequently deeply impressed by the senate's delay. Yet it is this very class that mainly make the body of sentiment we call public opinion. It is therefore not surprising that the attitude of the trained political warriors, known as "the silver leaders," should have created some dismay and much disappointment among this preponderant part of the public. And it is not to be supposed that the opinions of this class are unimportant because they are based upon imperfect observation; for opinions influence action in practical affairs, and in this case they carry a chill of apprehension through every branch of business.

The other point of view is that occupied by men conversant with the ins and outs of politics; familiar with the tricks, the limitations and the licenses of debate; versed in the mysteries of log-rolling, and acquainted with the party jealousies and the conflicting policies involved in the present political situation. To these observers there is nothing in the present attitude of the senate that is really inconsistent with a confident expectation that the upper house will finally adopt unconditional repeal. They cannot concede the possibility that the United States Senate will finally dare to carry affront to the almost universal public will to the extent of absolute disobedience. They know that, while it may be good parliamentary tactics to give the minority rope enough to hang themselves, yet the majority is made up of men who are conscious of their power and will not fail to use it to a purpose when a ripe opportunity occurs. They understand how it may be prudent to give each minority senator a chance to set himself right with his constituents or on his record; but they know that to the party now in power success in their issue is a matter of life or death, and that having prudently done all they can to avoid offense to their opponents, they will then unite with the Republican repealers in carrying the measure by a majority that will surprise the country by its magnitude.

This latter point of view is the one that now prevails in the best informed quarters in Wall street. There are bankers, well situated to know whereof they speak, who intimate that some of the influential fire-eaters of the minority have received warnings from constituents whom they are not likely to disregard that their obstruction must go no further; and the case of these senators is likely to become that of others also at an early day. The game of bluff and bluster has about exhausted itself, and that point being reached the chance for the minority showing its power will have come. Those nearest to the heart of the contest incline to the opinion that the time is not distant for the registering of a vote that will finally set this disturbing question at rest. Among bankers apt to give the cue to opinion on such matters, there is evidently a more confident feeling, and it finds expression in a freer disposition to extend their operations. The steady retirement of clearing house certificates is a hopeful symptom in this connection. Until recently, there has been a marked disposition among the banks to cling to that support until all doubt was removed as to the action of the senate. Out of the total issue of $38,000,000, however, only $26,000,000 is now outstanding—which is a significant expression of the estimate of the banks on the prospect. To the same effect is the welcome fact that the banks are lending and discounting much more freely, and without discrimination as to long loans.

The firmness of foreign exchange, so far as it may seem to foreshadow an export of gold, is not seriously viewed. As part of the gold lately imported came as the result of various expedients for temporary use, it is taken for granted that some of it must go back to Europe again. In the event of repeal, however, that cannot be a serious matter, for the improvement in our foreign credit would in that case create a fresh European demand for our securities; and the abundance of cash pouring from all sections into the banks will enable us to bear a reasonable foreign drain without inconvenience.

HENRY CLEWS.

Wool.

Brussels.

Trade has been quiet the past week, but the volume of sales foot up to a fair average considering general conditions. The past three weeks has shown that considerable wool has changed hands, but most manufacturers are operating conservatively to meet their present wants. The fact that many woolen mills have started obliging free purchases of the raw material, but the larger sales have not been sufficient to advance prices. Fine fleeces were firm at 23a24c for Ohio XX and XX and above, while for X Michigan about 20c is the price for choice lots. The low price of domestic fleeces makes the market for Australian nominal, as importers can only meet the market at a great loss to themselves. Territory wools are in large supply, and quoted on the scoured basis of 35a36c for fine medium, and 37a40c for fine. Texas wools are dull at 35c, secured for choice twelve months' growth spring, and about 30c for fall. The market closes with a more settled tone at old rates.

Another View.

Wool and Cotton Reporter.

While there is an improvement in the woolen goods market, it is of doubtful character as to its extent and duration, and it may be exceedingly treacherous (certainly no one can say whether it is, or not), and it would be folly for any man to place great reliance upon it. Our belief is that the improvement has come to stay for a time, but as we look into the future and weigh the probabilities of the approaching fall season, we are constrained to admit that there is not much to encourage the hope that the season will be at all satisfactory. While the season as a whole may require the usual yardage of goods, the demand will be from hand-to-mouth, and in consequence unsatisfactory to the manufacturer in that his production at no time will be well provided for.

We can imagine no change in the conditions which will cause the clothier to place orders in the usual way; he is, likely, influenced by the uncertainty of tariff legislation which is certainly to be a factor in next season's business, to confine his initial orders to sample pieces, taking no goods in anticipation of future needs. This condition is likely to retard the opening of the season, and agents who have in the past few years taken orders in November and December for the bulk of their production, may have to wait until after the coming in of the new year, and then get only a small proportion of the usual amount. If this is so, the annoyances and perplexities to be suffered by the manufacturer will be without number.

The Genuine and the Sham.

Every good thing has its host of imitators; every genuine article its counterfeit. The imitators always choose the most valuable and popular article to counterfeit, so that when they claim their sham to be equal, or as good, or the same as "So-and-So's," the public may depend upon it that "So-and-So's" article is the best of the kind. The sham proves the genuine merit of the thing it copies and never has this been better illustrated than by the imitations of ALCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER.

ALCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER is the standard of excellence the world over, and its imitators in their cry that theirs is "as good as ALCOCK'S" are only emphasizing this fact and admitting "ALCOCK'S" to be the acme of perfection, which it is their highest ambition to imitate. The difference between the genuine and these imitations, which copy only general appearance, is as wide as that between copper and gold.

The only safe way for purchasers is to always insist upon having ALCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER. They are the only perfect plaster ever produced.
